National Digital ID Why Australia must reject it

By STEPHEN REASON

A national digital ID is the precursor to introducing social credit scores, carbon credit, vaccine passports and cashless central bank digital currency (CBDC). It is the crucial component to establishing an AI-surveillance state.

will be instantaneously identifiable everywhere; geolocated and tracked; and with all personal data harvested and analysed – every aspect of your life, health and finances will be openly scrutinised by endless AI-profiling.

A national digital ID system will soon be foisted upon all Australians – if we let it.

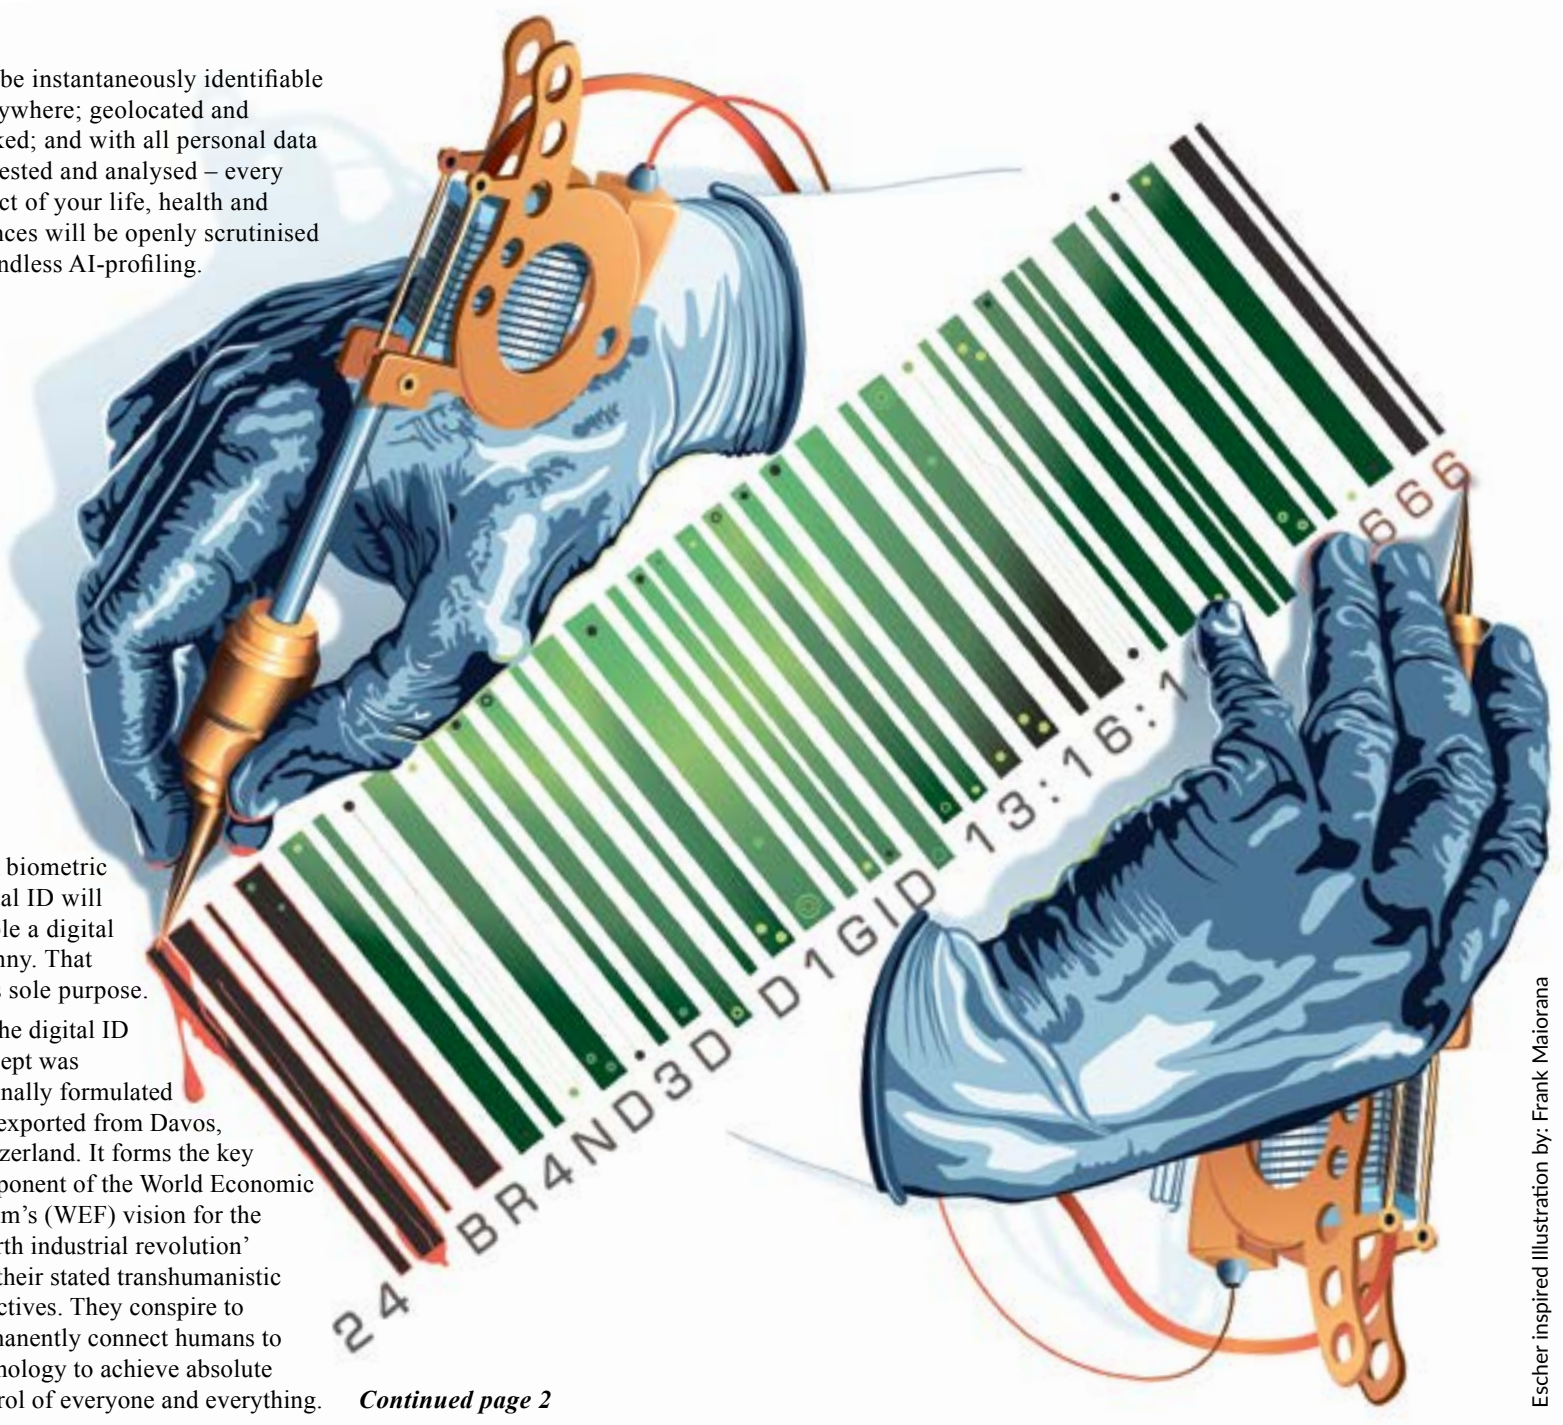

It will be unlike existing digital ID. The technology will be based on the storage of blockchain-encrypted biometrics that can be securely scanned and decoded upon request. Every Australian will be required to submit a combination of their unique biological aspects (fingerprints, palm print, iris scan, DNA, face scan, etc) to a nationwide database.

Once these biometrics have been gathered, they will comprise a unique digital ID that can be routinely accessed for verification and identification purposes. You

A biometric digital ID will enable a digital tyranny. That is its sole purpose.

The digital ID concept was originally formulated and exported from Davos, Switzerland. It forms the key component of the World Economic Forum's (WEF) vision for the 'fourth industrial revolution' and their stated transhumanistic objectives. They conspire to permanently connect humans to technology to achieve absolute control of everyone and everything.

A digital ID is the foremost prerequisite to realising their agenda.

The Australian digital ID project was initiated in 2015 under the former coalition government and was truly amplified during the midst of the 'new normal' hysteria. Our captured federal government is currently strategising and devising the means to coerce every citizen to submit to this 'revolutionary' system. It is being presented as the next logical progression to preserve and fortify data security and privacy. After a series of much-publicised false-flag 'hacks' and 'data leaks' (Optus, Medicare and Latitude) this new digitised-system, based on biometrics, will effectively counter fraud and identify theft.

It will also abolish privacy and effectively counter all aspects of human freedom.

A digital ID is the very lynchpin required to impose total AI-surveillance and absolute subjugation of the population. It is what will reflect back on the omnipresent retinas of the ever-gazing panopticon (the many all-seeing eyes of our digital prison). If the technocracy is to effectively see you it will look for the digital ID and as such, it is the crucial component for soldering humanity within an unyielding silicon-fist, forever.

Indeed, there can be no permanent biomedical technocracy, no AI-governed New World Order without a digital ID assigned to every human. It will be essential to cultivate and harvest the bountiful data on all citizens who are constantly blanketed by militarised 5G surveillance: those who are forced to partake in Klaus Schwab's transhumanist vision of an Internet of Things (IoT) and an Internet of Bodies (IoB).

All online activity will be observed through each digital ID and it will be used as a unique identifying key to gain access to the forthcoming Internet 2.0 – without it, you will be without internet access. The problem of hackers will be solved, for all hackers are anonymous, and without anonymity, all online crime and the spread of harmful 'misinformation and disinformation' will only ever be government-sanctioned.

Every expressed social media sentiment, every post, every email will be scanned, recorded and attributed to your digital ID.

All phone conversations and texts will be filtered and analysed for divergent attitudes to isolate fellow 'thought-accomplices' and alert authorities to potential pre-crime transgressions.

An oppressive atmosphere of self-censorship will be established by inflicting punitive measures upon the outspoken, the disgruntled and the habitually defiant.

A digital ID is truly about implementing a full spectrum dominance upon humanity and will provide the basis for eradicating cash and assigning unique digital wallets to each person to impose blockchain-enabled CBDC. Without a digital ID there can be no CBDC.

Once physical cash is abolished all digital transactions can be effortlessly AI-monitored and controlled. Individual purchases can be limited, or denied, according to official approval and customised green credit rationing – you will eat less meat, and only travel within a 15-minute radius of your home.

Thus, a digital ID will be instrumental in policing social credit scores, paying Universal Basic Income (UBI) (as trialled during the lockdown-period with JobKeeper payments) and assigning carbon credit allocations; as well as tracking vaccine uptake, movement, purchases, thoughts and mood (with injectable or wearable tech).

With it, along with your compliance, you will be able to access society. Without it, along with your defiance you will be outcast.

Every Australian citizen, including every child, will require a mandatory digital ID – they will start from birth: a digital slave from cradle to grave.

You will need it for everything; you will require it to buy and sell; you will depend upon it to eat: it is blatantly the Mark of the Beast.

"...it causes all, both small and great, both rich and poor, both free and slave, to be marked on the right hand or the forehead, so that no one can buy or sell unless he has the mark, that is, the name of the beast or the number of its name..." - Revelation 13:16-18

We must expose the technocratic tyranny that a national digital ID system will usher. It behoves us all to inform fellow Australians. We must emphasise how they will utilise this invasive technology to digitally enslave all citizens within their envisioned SMART city infrastructure.

The plans of the technocrats depend on three things: ignorance, submission and a digital ID.

Do not be ignorant; do not submit and do all you can to oppose the digital ID.

Excess deaths: Australia's broken drug safety system

By ALISON BEVEGE

Australia has no idea how many people were killed and injured by the covid gene-vaccines as the reporting system is broken, multiple experts have said.

DRUG regulator the Therapeutic Goods Administration (TGA) continues to claim only 14 deaths out of 1004 reports are 'linked to' the products in its safety report issued on 2 November 2023. The case alleges that there are not one, but two, GMO components in the mRNA covid vaccines.

Experts say this is completely wrong.

The number of gene-vaccine deaths is wildly understated and the system used by the TGA to assess drug safety is so broken that it is a danger to public health, doctors say.

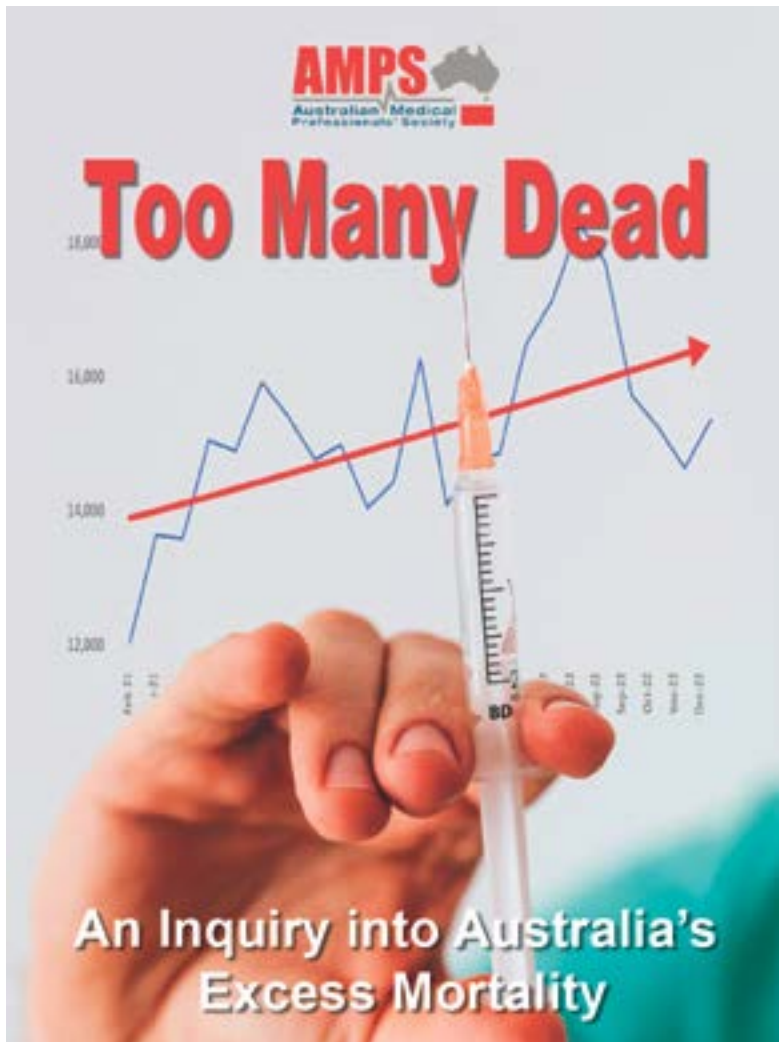

Regulatory expert Phillip Altman said covid gene-vaccine adverse events are under-reported by between 40 and 100 times on the TGA's Database of Adverse Event Notifications (DAEN).

"We know our DAEN system is

Dr Phillip Altman

"We know our DAEN system is completely broken as it only admits to 14 deaths being caused by the Covid-19 'vaccines'. We know this is not true. Our DAEN system is not picking up important safety signals" completely broken as it only admits to 14 deaths being caused by the covid-19 'vaccines'. We know this is not true. Our DAEN system is not picking up important safety signals", he wrote on Substack.

An Inquiry into Australia's Excess Mortality

Australian Medical Professionals Society (AMPS) president cardiologist Christopher Neil said the adjudication process used to determine causality is opaque.

"If we accept from those numbers that all but 14 notifications were unrelated and coincidental – with well over 900 of these death notifications being essentially spurious, despite often having been made by treating doctors – then this actually implies that the rate of true signal detection is just one in 70... an absurd claim that has never been made in the history of pharmacovigilance", he told Letters From Australia (LFA) via email.

Barrister Julian Gillespie told the Australians for Science and Freedom conference in November he has identified roughly 30,000 dead and more than 255,000 severely injured by the covid gene-vaccines. Mr Gillespie is spearheading a class-action lawsuit against 35 central defendants including Pfizer, Moderna and AstraZeneca.

GP and adjunct professor of medicine David Richards told LFA via email that European Medicines Agency and AusVaxSafety data suggest up to 3500 deaths from 70 million vaccine doses in Australia.

NZ government data released by whistleblower Barry Young in November show up to 1 in every 1000 people injected may have died. Instead of releasing the anonymised data for public analysis the NZ government arrested Mr Young and slapped on a non-publication order to censor it.

The NZ data suggests an Australian death toll of about 26,000.

The TGA simply has no idea how many people died because its reporting system is broken.

The regulator relies on voluntary reporting. If you don't tell them, it's not in the figures.

"It is acknowledged that some adverse events may go unreported", The TGA told LFA via email.

"However, the extensive data received by the TGA, together with cooperative arrangements with international regulators, provides a high level of confidence in our ability to rapidly identify and respond to potential covid-19 vaccine safety issues."

But most people did not report problems – so the TGA never received 'extensive data'.

Doctors were bullied by the Australian Health Practitioner Regulation Agency and the medical boards in a March 2021 directive to healthcare workers threatening disciplinary action if they criticised the gene-vaccines, which were promoted by relentless propaganda.

This discouraged reporting of side-effects both by the public who didn't know there could be a side-effects reports.

But both the Home Affairs and Health Departments directed social media firms to censor gene-vaccine injuries, rigging the system.

The result is thousands of unreported deaths.

AMPS said excess deaths surged at rates up to 17 percent above baseline average since the gene-vaccines were released.

In December AMPS launched a comprehensive book called Too Many Dead showing evidence the excess deaths rates are at least partly due to the gene-vaccines.

Australia's provisional problem, and by healthcare workers who feared retaliation, destroying the safety reporting mechanism.

Queensland GP Melissa McCann, who is spearheading a lawsuit on behalf of the vaccine injured, told how doctors were discouraged.

Previously the TGA's key reporting message was: "You don't have to be certain, just suspicious", she told the Australians for Science and Freedom conference in November.

"That's the opposite of what happened during covid, it was: 'Yes, you're obliged to report everything, but bear in mind that for almost all adverse events they're unrelated to the vaccine'."

That created an environment where patients who tried to tell their doctors what had happened to them were dismissed.

"Sometimes it was absolute ridicule and there was enormous discouragement to even draw the conclusion it was vaccine-related", she said.

Worse, in 2018 the law was changed to allow drugs onto the market before safety testing was finished via 'Provisional Registration', the category used for the gene-vaccines.

Immediate reporting of side effects establishes the safety profile and a black triangle on the packaging reminds people of this.

The TGA even directs drug-makers to scan social media for mortality figure for 2022 was 190,394, which was 15.3 percent above the historical average, leaving 25,235 excess deaths, the Australian Bureau of Statistics (ABS) reported in its Provisional Mortality Statistics for 2022, released March 2023.

The ABS said only 10,095 of these deaths were due to covid leaving 15,140 non-covid deaths in 2022.

But the ABS changed its methodology, disappearing those non-covid excess deaths.

Journalist Clare Pain investigated the change in the new AMPS book Too Many Dead, finding the figures alarming enough to warrant independent investigation.

No investigation has been launched. Instead, Australia's senate voted against establishing a committee to investigate the excess deaths in March.

This is unsurprising as the government itself along with its public health officials may be to blame.

A Stand in the Park: building unity in your community

By AMY HOLDSWORTH

TURNING up to a local park to see if there's anyone else around for a chat might seem like a curious way to spend your Sunday morning but for thousands of people around the world this regular activity is helping them to connect with their community, build friendships, make sense of world events and quite frankly, stay sane.

It's called A Stand in the Park (or ASITP) and the concept couldn't be simpler: meet in a park and chat, about anything and everything.

The first ASITP was held on 8 September 2020 in Hyde Park Sydney, organised by concept originator Brady Gunn. Brady says the fear and division he witnessed throughout that year prompted him to think about a way to bring people together, to unite them in a space "with no agenda, no religion and no leaders". Ahead of the first gathering Brady shared the details online for a 10am meet; that day he was the only one who showed up.

Not deterred by the lack of initial response Brady kept going back to Hyde Park each Sunday at 10am in a hi-vis yellow vest, recording videos from the park and sharing them online to spread the word that he would be there if anyone needed to chat – they just needed to look for 'the guy in yellow'.

For the better part of three months he was mostly the sole attendee each week. Joined occasionally by friend Andrea, Brady persevered in the belief that "we could really be something for each other if we focused on going towards unity rather than away from division". He hoped the idea would reach people looking for a place to be free to stand "in their own truth".

The quiet simplicity of what Brady was doing gradually began to break through all the noise. More people joined in – and not just in Hyde Park. A January 2021 post on the ASITP social media page listed eleven locations in Australia that had begun hosting ASITP weekly; a month later that list had quadrupled in size and included nine locations in New Zealand and two in Canada.

Around this time Brady was contacted by a UK-based friend, Fifi, who had been watching his Hyde Park videos with interest; Fifi organised the first ASITP in the UK in February 2021 and it quickly caught on. By late March the same year there were 100 locations worldwide with a third of them in the UK.

More than three years on ASITP is well and truly thriving. An estimated 100,000+ people across 40 different countries gather in over 1,400 parks every Sunday. As on that first morning in Hyde Park back in 2020, they still meet from 10am and the colour yellow still features as a landmark to look for.

There are a handful of very hardworking volunteers who manage the website and social media pages and help to facilitate new events but, true to Brady's original intentions, there are no 'leaders'. Every ASITP manages itself, there's no right or wrong way to do ASITP and no two of them look exactly alike – each one naturally becomes whatever the people attending need it to be.

The idea itself may be simple but this homegrown not-quite-movement is driven by and is fulfilling very complex human needs, such as hope and connection. Other initiatives have formed through this simple, consistent act of meeting each week and talking with like-minded people – including this very newspaper.

As Brady says "it won't ever do anything, but things will happen in it". The 'things' happening include lifelong friendships, strengthened communities, empowered individuals and warmed hearts.

Doctors recommend radiation-free tech

THE Santa Clara County Medical Association (SSCMA) in the US has called for precautions to protect students and staff from the harmful effects of wireless technology in schools.

'[T]he SSCMA supports reducing exposures to radiofrequency radiation from wireless devices and encourages establishing safer school technology policies with regard to digital devices and infrastructure in order to promote the physical health, mental health and well-being of students and staff. Healthier children translate into healthier communities and a healthier society,' the Association says in its 'Recommendations for Best Practices for Safe Technology in Schools'.

The document points out a range of problems associated with the use of wireless technologies. These include:

Effects on health: 'Scientific literature indicates that the mechanisms of harm include oxidative injury to critical molecules such as DNA/lipids/proteins (Gerner, XIe), membrane disruption, blood brain barrier disruption, and mitochondrial injury with much of the resultant cellular injury occurring at non-thermal levels which are well below current standards'.

Effects on eyes: 'There are also emerging scientific concerns with regards to eye damage and circadian rhythm disruption from blue light emitted from digital devices'.

Social media effects: '[T]he excessive use of digital technology and social media in children can have adverse mental health effects including internet addiction, cyberbullying, deficient social skills, depression and lack of exercise'.

Effects on privacy: Many apps require the sharing of children's personal information with third parties.

The Association recommends a number of ways to improve health, safety and the learning environment for students, including:

- educating students and staff about the risks of wireless devices and how to reduce them
- educating the school nurse about potential health effects of radiofrequency radiation (RFR) developing mobile phone-free school policies having tech free breaks during classes reducing blue light from devices

using hard-wired rather than wireless connections reducing RF radiation in schools establishing phone-free zones in schools

'using books instead of computers or tablets whenever possible for improved learning and less distraction' keeping wireless devices away from the body not installing smart meters on school properties not allowing mobile phone towers on school property.

'We have become especially concerned with the dramatic increase in the use of this technology in schools resulting in exponentially higher levels of non-ionizing radiofrequency electromagnetic radiation (EMR) emitted by these wireless devices. This results in increased long-term exposures in children who spend much of their formative years in school environments,' the SSCMA wrote.

What can you do? Reduce your exposure to mobile phone radiation with shielded mobile phone cases and air tube headsets. Measure the wireless radiation in your home, school and workplace with radiofrequency radiation meters. Protect your body from wireless radiation with shielding T-shirts and caps. Reduce your exposure to wireless radiation during sleep with shielding bed canopies.

No evidence masks made any difference

Cochrane review delayed while mask mandates were imposed

By ROBT

HAPPILY, since the start of 2023 when it seemed a concerted media push was in play to bring back widespread forced masking, things have improved considerably.

Perhaps surprisingly, after three years during which the strange mask obsession had proved completely impervious to evidence and common sense, the latest version of the Cochrane review actually seems to have made a dent with ‘Team Mask’.

Indeed it must have done if even hyper-aggressive mask cheerleader the New York Times has given up the fight.

In a piece for the paper headlined The Mask Mandates Did Nothing. Will Any Lessons Be Learned? Bret Stephens writes:

“The most rigorous and comprehensive analysis of scientific studies conducted on the efficacy of masks for reducing the spread of respiratory illnesses – including covid-19 – was published late last month. Its conclusions, said Tom Jefferson, the Oxford epidemiologist who is its lead author, were unambiguous.

“There is just no evidence that they” – masks – “make any difference,” he told the journalist Maryanne Demasi. “Full stop.”

But, wait, hold on. What about N-95 masks, as opposed to lower-quality surgical or cloth masks?

“Makes no difference – none of it,” said Jefferson.

What about the studies that initially persuaded policymakers to impose mask mandates?

“They were convinced by non-randomised studies, flawed observational studies.”

What about the utility of masks in conjunction with other preventive measures, such as hand hygiene, physical distancing or air filtration?

These observations don’t come from just anywhere. Jefferson and 11 colleagues conducted the study for Cochrane, a British nonprofit that is widely considered the gold standard for its reviews of health care data. The conclusions were based on 78 randomised controlled

The more interesting story here is not the confirmation that masks don’t work, but why this unremarkable information was suppressed trials, six of them during the covid ‘pandemic’, with a total of 610,872 participants in multiple countries. And they track what has been widely observed in the United States: states with mask mandates fared no better against covid than those without.

Of course, that all this was known three years ago, and never needed proving all over again at possibly unrecoverable cost to the general psychological wellbeing of the public, hasn’t quite registered yet. And with a hardcore of people, it evidently never will; radical masker Professor Trish Greenhalgh quickly knocked out a paper in response, hilariously entitled: Yes, masks reduce the risk of spreading covid, despite a review saying they don’t.

However, the more interesting story here is not the confirmation that masks don’t work, but why this unremarkable information was so ruthlessly suppressed. This happened from very early on in the covid episode, particularly in Autumn 2020, when forced masking was getting established as policy across the world.

Smile Free’s Dr Gary Sidley has been investigating this, noting: “The previous 2020 version (of the Cochrane review), incorporating updates up until January 2020, had passed peer review and was finalised by April of the same year.

Extraordinarily, its publication was delayed until November 2020 due to ‘unexplained editorial decisions’.

According to lead author, Dr. Tom Jefferson, this extra scrutiny was “a very unexpected event in Cochrane, especially during a period in which the topic of the review and the setting of policy was of worldwide importance. It is unlikely to be coincidence that this window of delay corresponds to the period when the UK and other governments, under intense pressure from pro-mask groups, U-turned and imposed mask mandates on their populations.”

Gary’s latest article looking in depth at this, The Silencing of the Inconvenient Truth About Face Masks, can be read in full at the Daily Sceptic website.

■ Smile Free is the campaign against forced masking in the UK. It continues to campaign against forced masking in healthcare settings and the workplace, and for recognition of the misguided policies of the last three years so they can never happen again. Find out more at: www.smilefree.org

Rigged, how networks of powerful mates rip off everyday Australians

A book review by KATE RICHARDS

Rigged describes how an in-crowd has developed in Australia that dominates all areas of political decision-making and public expenditure. This is the Game of Mates where favours and paybacks are so entrenched it is considered normal. Mates move seamlessly between politics, boardrooms, lobby groups and regulatory bodies. The game goes on without pause.

Ex-prime minister Tony Abbott was blasé about the game when he said in a public address on the retirement of resources minister Ian Macfarlane "... I hope the sector will acknowledge and demonstrate their gratitude to him in his years of retirement from this place" (Crikey, 2016). Months later Macfarlane got his reward. He was appointed as the CEO of the Queensland Resources Council lobby group.

Murray and Frijters have used the name James to signify someone who is in this exclusive and profitable club. The club runs through all major businesses including superannuation, banking, property development, higher education, infrastructure, mining and media.

Typically, James has gone to the right school, joined the right social clubs and worn the correct clothes to indicate his or her desire to be part of the game. He or she shows their intention by giving gifts which may not be directly returned. They join a web of favours and connections.

Sometimes a new member is given a risky task to test their loyalty. The Game of Mates, the authors argue, has similarities to the mafia. Knowing the dirt on each other becomes a form of insurance and keeps people silent and in the club.

The hapless working Aussie is called Sam. As the game goes on there are more Jameses in Australia wanting a slice of the pie and fewer Sams creating our national wealth. For this reason, James favours immigration. Skilled migrants have been raised and educated at no cost to James. These migrants have no strong political affiliation. They want to work and get along. They will not threaten the Game of Mates. They become more Sams who can be fleeced in tax, superannuation, home mortgages and living costs.

The authors introduce the term grey gifts. These are gifts that go to property developers, infrastructure businesses, mining companies and other key groups at the disadvantage of the general public. While these gifts are not directly illegal, they are stealing from our common wealth. When our taxes pay for a road from a private mine to a port, this is a grey gift.

Another example comes from the Great Property Development Game. Grey gifts occur when a property developer gains a financial advantage when a piece of land is rezoned, say from single dwelling to multiple dwellings. This rezoning increases the land value and the developer has a financial windfall. Funds that could reduce Sam's taxes or pay for new hospitals are lost to the big players in the property game.

In Queensland the authors estimate 70% of the rezoning value goes to well-connected property developers. Across Australia we lose nearly $19 billion each year to developers when they are not charged for the gains from rezoning. A standout exception is the ACT. Here they have the betterment tax. This is charged to landowners or buyers when a piece of land is rezoned and the land value is expected to rise.

Another lucrative game in Australian cities is the Great Transportation Game. Under the name of Public Private Partnerships (PPPs) the people are burdened with the cost of new roads, light rail and tunnels that are not required and do not live up to their projected usage. Before a project starts mates are contracted to provide surveys. Of course, the survey reports are favourable. It's a closed game.

There are opportunities to loot the public after construction too. With the Cross City Tunnel (CCT) in Sydney the owners arranged with their mates for other roads to be closed in the interest of street quietening. This funnelled more paying traffic into the tunnel. Sydneysiders woke up to the game and many of the planned street closures and road resurfacing projects were cancelled.

Rigged provides an in depth look at the game across different spheres but that's not all. Murray and Frijters show examples of how other countries have organised these spheres and benefitted their people. They offer positive examples about mining royalties, fair superannuation and affordable home mortgages. They also point out the myths James spins to keep the game running.

Murray and Frijters are confident the Game of Mates can be disrupted and ended by calling out the myths and removing the grey gifts that make the game so lucrative. They offer some recent examples. Uber disrupted the taxi monopoly and now fares are around 14% cheaper. Aldi broke into the supermarket duopoly and customers benefitted. When the game is challenged mates will kick and scream and play dirty to keep their powerbase. This book is a call to action. Australians in earlier times fought against inequality. Now, the authors argue, it's our turn to step up.

Curing allergies with science and vegetables

A book review by JERRY ROBERTS

IN his book On the Origin of Diseases Dr Neil B Benson MD observes the first principle of technical writing: tell the story in everyday language that the general reader can understand while providing enough material to make the experts take notice. Indeed the author sets challenges for the next generation of doctors, researchers and entrepreneurs.

The book's 100 pages are organised in short chapters with simplified diagrams illustrating the workings of the body and explaining the author's goal to identify and treat the causes of disease rather than simply moderate the symptoms.

This reviewer first encountered Dr Benson when he was interviewed on 23 August 2023 on Donnybrook Balingup Community Radio by Barry Green, who practises and preaches regenerative agriculture and regenerative media in that orchard and mixed farming district of Western Australia's south west.

The two men on air traded traditional wisdom. Barry quoted his maxims of "healthy food grown in healthy soil" and "stability through diversity". Neil responded, "If you don't eat your green vegetables you are not going to be as healthy as you could be".

The doctor was speaking from experience. In his childhood he suffered from asthma, eczema and recurrent sinusitis which his mother attributed to growing up on antibiotics.

Before his medical training in Canada Dr Benson completed degrees in botany and agricultural science. He writes that this education provided knowledge of "fungal organisms, food production methods, food chemistry, nutrition, information on botanical groupings and an ecological way of thinking".

The childhood experience and scientific background came together when he was practising medicine in New Zealand and became so well known for successful treatment of allergies that he suffered the fate of professionals ahead of their time when he encountered an obstructionist bureaucracy.

He now lives in the south-west Western Australian city of Bunbury. His soft-cover book available through book stores is modest in outward appearance but ambitious in its purpose.

In the introduction he writes,

"The problem solved here is the causative mechanism for chronic inflammatory disease which includes allergy and autoimmunity. The causation is chronic infection and this knowledge has massive implications to medicine. I have endeavoured to show how this new understanding of chronic disease has the capacity to change the health of our society and all societies".

The author writes about the key role of soluble fibre in healthy functioning of the gut and describes the studies that led to his announcement of 'the abnormal bowel cascade'. Throughout the book the doctor stresses the importance of green vegetables playing a dominant role in our daily diet. He mentions broccoli, cabbage, spinach and cauliflower.

"We should eat lots of green vegetables and a range of green and coloured vegetables. Diversity in food gives a range of nutrients and encourages diversity in the gut flora which, in turn, helps us".

The villain of the story is a pathogen called candida albicans, more commonly known as thrush. Here the author brings together medical science and a holistic dietary approach, emphasising that the over-use of antibiotics and poor diet are primarily responsible for the rising rate of allergies and autoimmune disease.

"If identified early on, candida albicans is often treatable by diet and by a single prescription medication called nystatin. What is nystatin, you say? In my opinion it is the second most important drug of the 20th century (second to penicillin)".

He notes that this effective antifungal antibiotic is not a statin as in cholesterol treatment. The name derives from New York State Department of Health where the microbiologists who discovered the substance were working.

Throughout the book the author maintains his mixture of practical advice to the host of people suffering from allergies and other chronic diseases with specific professional advice to his colleagues in medical practice and research.

5G and the awakening

By RICHARD HOUSE

Intrepid 5G campaigner Tanja Rebel interviewed by Richard House

Richard House [RH]: There've been a number of big events held recently on 5G (see Resources section); do you sense a turning of the tide in relation to the 5G issue?

Tanja Rebel [TR]: I do. In fact, I believe we are nearing a boiling-point where the pot will soon boil over. There are more and more scientists daring to speak up and, as you point out, more and more events across the world highlighting the harm caused by electrosmog to humans, wildlife and the Earth at large – not to mention the threat to our privacy street lights is merely the precursor of Smart Cities and The Internet of Everything, for which 5G is essential.

The dangers of 5G (and electrosmog in general) were pointed out to me by my Polish chiropractor. Polish (and Russian) scientists have long had an in-depth understanding of the harms caused by Electro-Magnetic Radiation, and the rest of the world needs to catch up before it rolls out ever-higher frequencies.

In the lower stratosphere, tens of thousands (100,000 approved) satellites are being launched to enable 'Broadband For All', harming the the ionosphere, the magnetosphere (i.e., the electric circuit essential for all life), blanketing the Earth in electrosmog, disturbing astronomical and meteorological observations – and destroying the view of our night sky.

RH: Tell us about your amazing campaigning work on 5G, and Polish (and Russian) scientists have long had an in-depth understanding of the harms caused by Electro-Magnetic Radiation, and the rest of the world needs to catch up before it rolls out ever-higher frequencies.

and human rights.

It will be harder and harder for the mainstream media to ignore the facts being put forward by these scientists, which are based upon tens of thousands of peer-reviewed studies. Once we've reached a critical mass in the general population, who until now have not been informed of the facts, the tide will turn. Until then, we must keep on pushing! Of course, most importantly of all, we must walk our talk and relinquish all wireless gadgets for wired connections. Anything else would not be serious.

RH: What was it that first drew your attention to there being a problem with 5G?

TR: I got into this via the LED route, being an early campaigner against the (totally un-green) roll-out of LED street lights across the country – and the world – when it was obvious that these lights were not at all beneficial from a public-health perspective. However, I was met with such a level of resistance by the powers-that-be, even when confronted with the clear facts that these lights are not green at all, that I wondered what was going on. It took me a while to realise that the roll-out of LED some of the challenges you've come up against in the process.

TR: A lot of people think that I'm beating a dead horse. However, I was taught early on that if you want to reach a certain goal, you need to retain focus and keep at it; I've done this with Global 5G Protest.

It started on January 25, 2020, when a Croatian woman and I got together to encourage people to rise up against the worldwide 5G roll-out, foisted upon us without any independent Health or Environmental Impact Assessments, public consultations, or free and informed consent – a right enshrined in UN Law. The first protest was big, with events in 38 countries and big crowds in Copenhagen, Amsterdam and Munich. People also came out in significant numbers in the U.S., Australia, India and South Africa. So we set another protest for March that year.

Then covid happened. The plandemic cowered people into their homes, and when they eventually emerged, many had either become too frightened or too distracted by everything going on to retain focus on stopping 5G. People rose up against lockdowns and vaccines, with huge freedom marches worldwide. Unfortunately, these marches commonly omitted to mention the very thing being rolled out during lockdowns, threatening to take away freedom for ever. It's becoming ever more apparent that, apart from being a health and environmental threat, 5G is a surveillance grid-in-the-making, and protecting freedom necessitates stopping it. If not, we'll find ourselves locked into an electronic prison.

So we've called subsequent protests (there've been many) 'Global 5G Protest for Freedom'. Since 2020, we've organised a protest every season to coincide with equinoxes and solstices. Numbers haven't been as large as for our first protest, but there have been thousands of brilliant events worldwide, with amazing pictures which we've made into collages and distributed in press releases across social and mainstream media. However, apart from once in January 2020, they have been ignored, and even the alternative media hasn't been particularly receptive. Maybe this interview will mark a turning point?

RH: Let's hope so! Very briefly – what would victory look like for the 5G movement?

TR: An immediate halt to the 5G roll-out and the dismantling of all masts. But this is only the beginning. We need the total dismantling of all wireless radiation equipment in favour of wired connections, which are more safe, effective and secure.

Moreover, we need a complete re-evaluation of electromagnetic radiation and its effect on humans and wildlife, with far lower exposure levels – International Commission on Non-Ionising Radiation Protection (ICNIRP) 'safe' levels are ridiculously high, but what authorities invariably refer to when dismissing the serious potential health problems of 5G.

The only safe level is the Earth's natural background radiation. Humans don't need ever more connectivity; we urgently need to reconnect to the Earth and each other.

The three distractions of the Voice

By JERRY ROBERTS

A POSTSCRIPT to a divisive political campaign

Military analysts tell us that we are now in the era of fifth generation warfare. In this strategy countries are brought to their knees through the creation of internal division to the point where they can no longer summon the social and economic cohesion needed to maintain a viable nation state.

In recent military history, the move to this fifth generation followed the failure of America's 'hearts and minds' project in the Vietnam War. For Americans and Australians today, the question is – why are we using these tactics against ourselves and tearing our own countries to pieces?

During Australia's debate on The Voice Graham Hood and John Larter on Club Grubbery interviewed Aboriginal elder Richard Shillingsworth and civil rights lawyer Peter Fam.

The following is a transcript of Peter Fam's analysis, taken directly from the Club Grubbery show of September 11, 2023.

"In my lived experience and my experience as a human rights lawyer, the Government here in Australia has never cared about the well-being of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people so history suggests that the Voice is not about that. In the past few years, I think those of us who did not already know it realised that the government does not care about us either. So, we have something in common.

"Everybody knows the mainstream media are bought and sold. We know as well that their main tactic is distraction. Try and make us look in one direction so we don't look at what's going on over there (in the other direction). Like the magic trick of misdirection.

"What are they trying to distract us from? I suggest three things.

"The first is what they are actually doing. The central bank digital currency (CBDC), digital surveillance, censorship and misinformation bill, World Health Organisation, World Economic Forum, health regulations they are trying to pass, tidal waves of vaccine injuries and death all around the world, the mitigation of our civil liberties for the benefit of the globalist technocratic system where the few who know best try to control the many who can't be trusted with their own liberty.

"The second thing - and this may be even more important, especially where there is so much division and in-fighting even within the freedom movement – is from ourselves and from our own well-being. What we focus on is where our energy goes and they know that. If we are focusing on external fighting, especially arguing about things, we are not being the best version of ourselves.

"The best version of ourselves would not stand for any of this stuff that has gone on. We wouldn't stand for the high rates of illness and death in our kids. We wouldn't stand for the issues that are literally killing us – the toxicity in our environment. We would not stand for what is happening to the land we live on, for what is happening to our communities.

"So, the question is how are we doing? Is there work we could be doing on ourselves but we are not because we are too busy arguing with people?

"Thirdly, it is about division. Divide and conquer. The more inflammatory debates and polarising topics they can throw into the community, the more likely we are to spend all of our time fighting each other instead of realising that we have a common enemy. The bodies and organisations that are throwing these polarising topics into the community over and over again are our common enemy.

"So, if we just work together as a community, we can ignore them completely, we can create a life that is worth living together. We have to do this because the systems we are living in are crumbling and actually trying to harm us.

"We don't have a choice but to come together and create alternatives for ourselves".

Asset confiscations must stop

THEY destroy trust, they destroy free democracies and they destroy capitalism.

The United States (US) has reportedly confiscated US $58 Billion of Russian citizen's assets over the last year in retaliation for the Ukraine conflict. The so-called Russian Elites, Proxies and Oligarchs (REPO) Task Force is coordinating this. The task force is a joint effort between the US, Australia, Canada, Germany, Italy, France, Japan, the UK and the European Commission.

This is unwise in the extreme in BOOM's opinion. Private property and the ownership of such is a central pillar of free, democratic nations that adhere to capitalism. If nations confiscate (or destroy) the assets of citizens of any foreign nation, then they are stabbing democracy and capitalism in the back. Nothing good can come of this. And destruction of offshore assets can be perceived as tantamount to a declaration of war. The destruction of the Nordstream pipeline is arguably the dumbest foreign policy action ever taken and will mark a major turning point in world history in BOOM's opinion.

REPO made this statement in March 2023 – "As Russia's war of aggression continues, REPO members remain determined in their commitment to impose steep costs on Russia. REPO will continue to identify, locate, and freeze the assets of sanctioned Russians, with the aim of depriving the Kremlin of the funds it needs to fight its illegal war."

So stealing assets is OK? BOOM is not sure what a legal war is. Perhaps readers may know?

If those western nations choose to confiscate more Russian assets, this trend will worsen and international trust will be further damaged, possibly beyond repair.

This is the case especially if the assets are sold and the proceeds transferred to Ukraine as has been proposed. The US in particular and Western Europe will be adversely affected if this were to happen. Many nations will become naturally wary of holding assets in western nations dominated by US policies.

SIDS now SADS: Sudden Adult Death Syndrome

By DR JUDY WILYMAN PhD

SIDS stands for Sudden Infant Death Syndrome.

Since February 2021 when Western Australian premier, Mark McGowan, told parents they were ‘drop-kicks’ if they did not get the covid mRNA injections, we now have SADS – Sudden Adult Death Syndrome.

There has also been a significant increase in chronic illnesses following the coerced mRNA gene-vaccines.

This bullying by Australian politicians and public health authorities is perpetuating a medical fraud.

Thousands of Australians have been killed or injured by the gene-based jabs but their stories are suppressed and under-reported by corporate media. Instead, they are documented by Jab Injuries Australia, a non-profit group of volunteers.

There are thousands of published scientific articles linking increased chronic illnesses and deaths to the covid gene-vaccines, including links to heart disease, thrombosis, infertility, cancer and neurological diseases.

If health practitioners had abided by the fundamental principle of medicine that all medical interventions must be given with ‘informed consent without coercion, pressure or manipulation’ then this harm could never have happened.

Iceland has suspended the Moderna covid ‘vaccine’ over heart inflammation (ie myocarditis and pericarditis); Sweden has restricted the injections to older people; Finland has halted Moderna to young men; Denmark does not recommend covid vaccination under 50 years of age and the UK has walked back vaccination recommendations to exclude these products are of no use in reducing the spread of infection.

The charade continues with the media reporting a worker shortage, without mentioning that thousands of people lost their jobs because they would not take the gene-vaccines.

Many of these police, teachers and nurses who lost their jobs now have misconduct charges against their name, because they health back into society.

In 2021, then health minister Greg Hunt said we were “in the largest global vaccination trial ever” with the covid gene-vaccines and we would have “enormous amounts of data”. So, who is looking for the patterns of disease in this experiment?

No-one is recording the long-term health outcomes from these injections. This requires is an unmonitored experiment on the population.

If you want a future with ethics and morals, YOU must act. Here are three things to do:

1. Ensure our politicians remove Australia from the corrupted World Health Organisation (WHO).
2. Expose the corporate medical regulatory board – AHPRA – that does not use objective empirical science to make claims about vaccines.
3. Ensure your doctor/health professionals join the Australian Medical Professional Society (AMPS) to bring ethics back into medicine.

healthy kids under 12 years of age.

No jab – no job, travel or restaurant is coercion, manipulation and pressure, yet the Australian government does not acknowledge this. Our leaders are lying to the public by claiming Australians took the gene-vaccines voluntarily. It was coerced.

The NSW health department still requires two covid jabs plus a flu jab for anyone applying for a job, even in administration – despite overwhelming evidence stood up for integrity against the government’s coercive mandates.

Losing your job is not a choice if it destroys your career and you cannot feed your family.

Corporate capture of government and academia is the reason these principles of medicine are being violated. We now have a ‘sickness industry’ protecting corporate interests in government policy, and not a ‘health industry’.

We need politicians to tell the truth to get integrity and mental the government to collect and publicise the health outcomes of all vaccinated and unvaccinated people in this population trial for five to ten years minimum.

The health department has refused for two years to publish the all-cause-mortality figures stratified by age and gene-vaccine status.

Nobody is collecting or publishing long-term data to identify patterns of illness in gene-vaccinated and unvaccinated participants. If you don’t look then you don’t find. This

Where the real power and control lies

By MARK MONEYCIRCUS

THE roots of the public-private partnership in health go back at least a century to the capture of medicine as described by E. Richard Brown in Rockefeller Medicine Men: Medicine and Capitalism in America.

The kerosene king had started out selling counterfeit snake oil, but once the technology of cracking petroleum arrived, the ingenuity of his fellow Germans led to petrochemical-based pharmaceuticals.

Rockefeller became the biggest name in U.S. pharmaceuticals by using the power of his endowments to gain control of medical schools. He promptly banned traditional medicine. Simultaneously he became a force in the media.

It is not just a curious parallel that today we see Big Pharma, the medical profession and the corporate media in cahoots – they are largely the same interests.

The vast profits to be made set off a rivalry between the U.S. and Britain on the one hand, and Germany on the other. That quest for wealth was to shape the 20th century.

Government, for all its big budgets and burden on taxpayers, cannot compete with private foundations. These are the playthings of families and wealthy individuals. Through think tanks, the big four auditors and their consultancies, and the banks and private equity, corporate forces make government policy.

Examples include George Soros’s well documented and lavish funding of selected

U.S. district attorneys, having realised how the political machine – and electoral process – can be controlled through the judicial system.

There is Bill Gates’s development of Common Core and successful effort through the teachers’ unions, academics and politicians to foist it upon the U.S.

The powerful influence of billionaire families like the Pritzkers set the gender debate, as explored by Jennifer Bilek.

It goes much deeper than the revolving door between government and the private sector. Catherine Austin-Fitts explains how defence contractors control computing and IT systems, including information and payments. Private banks run the financial systems.

Democratically-elected governments are no longer sovereign: their information and payment systems are now run by banks and corporations and they restrict what they allow politicians to see.

When Austin-Fitts was number two in charge of the Department of Housing and Urban Development in the 1990s, contractors flat out denied her access to information. It is worth quoting her at length:

“Sovereign government no longer controls the information and payment systems. They are run by the defence contractors who report to a shadow government. The NY Federal Reserve and member banks operate as depositors. So they run the bank accounts and financial systems and the defence contractors run the information and payment systems. Between them they report to the shadow government or themselves.

If the middle class is going to reassert authority, that means control of the digital systems – the sovereign government, the president, the officials do not control them. They control the appropriations”.

There is one deeper and more troubling feature of heist by organised crime. Unlike Lucky Luciano and Meyer Lansky, today’s dons have absorbed the lessons of Freud and Bernays. They employ the skills of Marc Bernays Randolph, founder and CEO of Netflix. Whether Randolph knows it or not, he helps to sculpt the cranium that accepts the Great Lockdown.

In summary, the degree of mind control that accompanies Event Covid, the Lockdown and the momentous transfer of wealth that is taking place in its shadow, makes the propaganda machine of the Third Reich look like playtime.

Coining in on future currency

By DANIEL BUBB-SACKLYN

CBDCs, cash and Bitcoin vying for position in our wallets

IN an era where the mainstream narrative often dictates public opinion and actions, I have chosen a less-travelled path: doing the opposite of what is generally advised.

This approach has been surprisingly effective. From questioning untested pharmaceutical treatments, doubting the traditional food pyramid, and navigating the complex world of higher education and its associated financial burdens, I've embraced a path of scepticism and self-reliance.

Within traditional finance, this philosophy extends to the use of cash. Contrary to mainstream advice, which favours digital transactions for convenience, cash offers distinct advantages.

It offers control, privacy, and immunity from censorship.

These values might seem insignificant until they become crucial, as vividly illustrated by the plight of Canadian truckers. Yet, there's a growing sense that the era of cash might be nearing its end. As cash is issued by central banks, its existence could come to an end if they choose to discontinue its issuance.

Most people don't realise that their money is essentially just numbers on a screen and doesn't really exist in a tangible form. The funds displayed in your online banking app are, in a technical sense, not entirely under your ownership either, as banks have the authority to lend out and use your deposits.

Holding onto cash as a long-term strategy also poses challenges. The diminishing purchasing power of cash, a result of government overspending and increasing debt, is a harsh reality. A depressing amount of our tax money goes on war and interest debt. We are forced to pay our hard-earned money on mismanaged finances and forever wars.

Bitcoin is based on blockchain - a transparent transaction ledger system

The historical example of Weimar Germany, where hyperinflation rendered cash worthless, is a cautionary tale. The financial crisis of 2008 and the economic disruptions during the covid-19 pandemic further illustrate how government policies can favour large corporations over small businesses, leading to what some describe as crony capitalism.

Gold has traditionally been a refuge against currency devaluation, but it is with limitations, especially regarding mobility and ease of transaction. Enter Central Bank Digital Currencies (CBDCs), a modern solution that leverages blockchain technology.

However, the efficacy of CBDCs is still a matter of debate, as evidenced by the failed projects in countries like Nigeria and China.

They also offer programmability into our money, a feature that has not existed before in money. This will allow the government to close the loop on our growing surveillance state.

Looking ahead, it appears increasingly likely that cash will become obsolete in the UK, to be replaced by CBDCs. CBDCs will be pitched as a solution to inflation and the cost-of-living crisis. However, this will be another government mistruth designed to confuse and distract.

A CBDC is essentially a digital version of our current, weakening currency, but with the added feature of programmability – controlling where and what you can spend on, and even setting expiry dates.

This represents a fundamental change to the nature of money, which is being introduced by stealth to avoid public uproar.

In this context, the mainstream media's stance on Bitcoin is noteworthy. Often portrayed negatively, Bitcoin is dismissed as a tool for illegal activities or an environmental threat.

However, these criticisms are not true and overlook the fundamental attributes of Bitcoin as a decentralised, peer-to-peer electronic cash system. Money that has a connection to real work and energy, like gold, and is not created from thin air.

What, then, would constitute ideal money? Consider a currency with a capped supply to prevent debasement, like Bitcoin, which is limited to 21 million coins, yet highly divisible by 100,000,000 'Satoshis'. Bitcoin's design makes it censorship-resistant, enabling transactions without intermediaries.

It's also permissionless, allowing free access to anyone in the world, further democratised by innovations like sending Bitcoin via SMS, a boon for those without smartphones.

Bitcoin banks the unbanked, and provides a solution for those distrusting their governments, or who have been debanked for having non-mainstream views.

Bitcoin's open-source nature ensures transparency and ongoing improvements in transaction costs, speed, and privacy.

This represents a new form of money that aligns with the principles of freedom and autonomy. It challenges us to rethink our approach to currency and financial sovereignty. It is a global money outside of governmental control.

Alongside traditional assets like gold and cash, Bitcoin offers an alternative worth considering. Its resistance to debasement and growing acceptance makes it an appealing option for transactions and savings.

However, it is important to differentiate Bitcoin from the broader category of cryptocurrencies, as this article specifically advocates for Bitcoin. Bitcoin and crypto are not the same.

The best thing about Bitcoin is you don't need to ask permission. Transactions are confirmed, not approved.

The never-ending potboiler

By JEFFREY R GRIMSHAW

CLIMATE alarmist hyperbole broke all previous records in July 2023 when Antonio Guterres, UN chief and former president of the Socialist International, declared that we had entered the “era of global boiling”. Like all previous absurd proclamations and predictions from the Hot Earth Society there is no truth to this statement. The only thing reaching boiling point is climate fear-porn and the only crisis is one of credibility.

Globally, over $2 trillion is now spent on climate change yet no scientist has proven man-made CO2 emissions cause global boiling and wind and solar still only contribute 6% of global energy requirements. The global warming industry is now larger than big pharma and the military industrial complex. This has occurred in a little over two decades and is funded from money taken out of your pockets and redistributed to the elites, it is welfare for Davos comrades and the well-connected in Wentworth and Warringah.

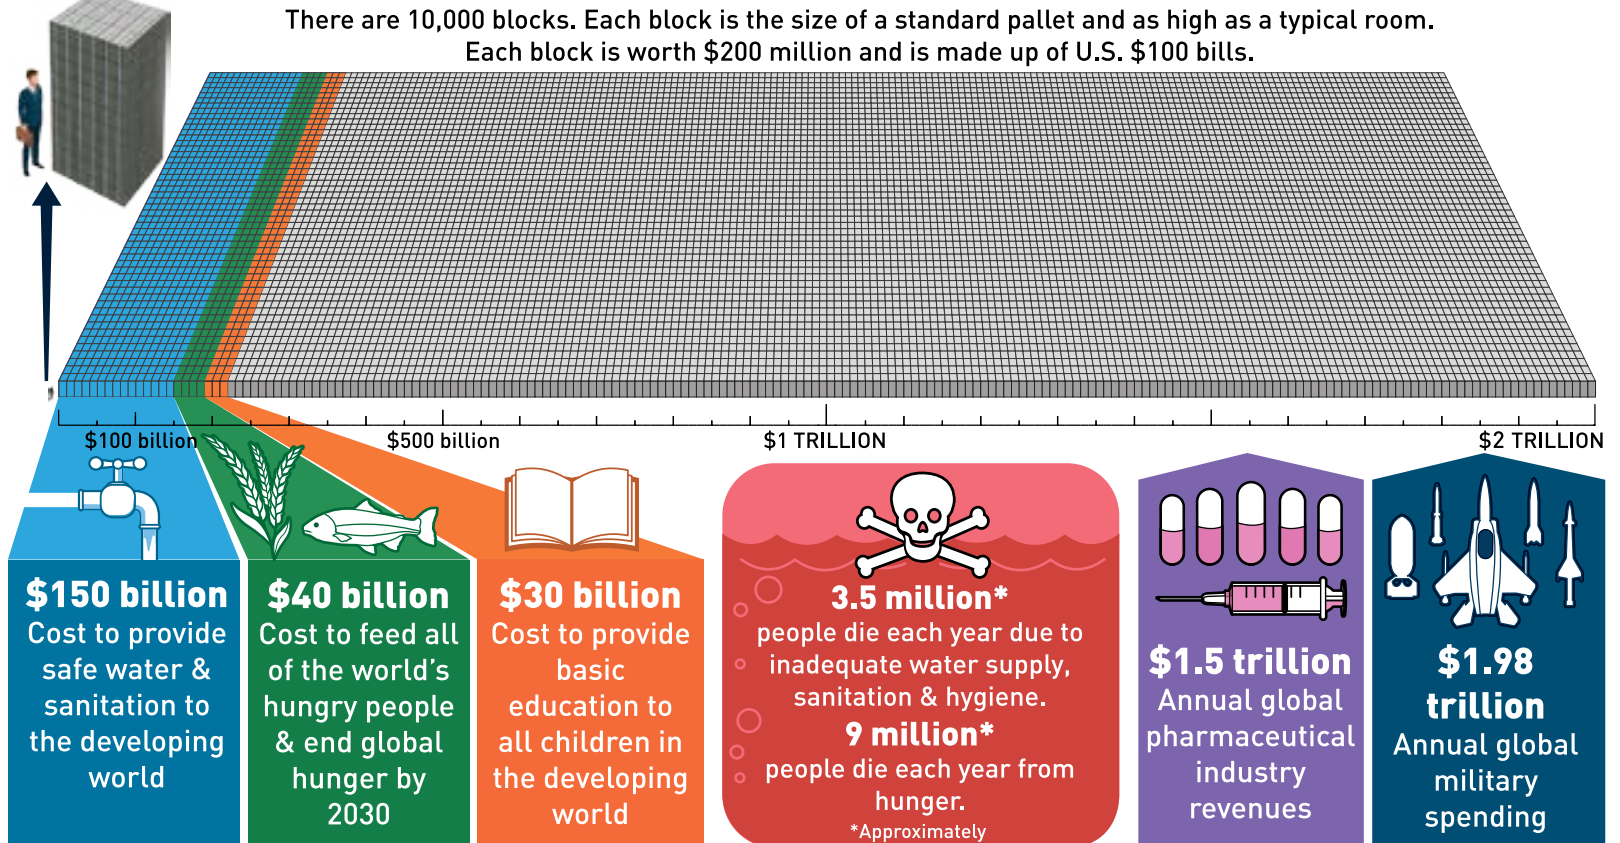

Just fifteen years ago, politicians were calling for a 5% reduction in CO2 emissions under the Kyoto agreement. Kevin Rudd claimed this would cost households “something like $1 per person per year”. 5% soon escalated to 20%, then 50%, and now ‘net zero’. Some climate catastrophists now push for ‘absolute zero’, that is no CO2 emissions at all from human activity. As every person exhales 2 pounds of CO2 per day, one can only surmise that their goal is to eliminate humanity.

Electricity bills in 2007 were a few hundred dollars for the average family, now they are in the thousands and the trickle-down effect has seen the cost of goods and services skyrocket. Power prices have crippled industry, devastated our manufacturing and small businesses have to raise prices or risk closing. Inflation is higher driven largely by power prices as producers pass on higher energy costs at every point in the supply chain.

The global boiling fiction can forever be written and re-written into a never-ending story of disaster, the solution to which always involves higher taxes, power prices and bigger government. An army of well-paid propagandists, masquerading as scientists and journalists, are constantly adding new plot twists, villains and terrifying scenarios. CO2 has now been joined by methane and nitrogen and all by-products such as ammonia. These naturally occurring elements and compounds are essential to food production. Without fertilisers half the world would starve. Methane also provides over 40% of energy for heating and cooking in the form of natural gas. Global elites and their lackeys in parliament have declared war on farming and food. Gas appliances are being banned by local councils at the behest of transnational organisations like the World Economic Forum (WEF) and 350.org.

Every storm, fire or flood is now attributed to human activity and when the supply of crises cannot meet demand then graduates from the school of ‘how to lie with statistics’ will adjust temperature records, manipulate graphs and produce pre-determined models of doom and gloom. The media will then convey the propaganda peppered with emotive phrases; “worse than scientists imagined”, “warming twice as fast” and “five years left to save the planet”.

‘Saving the planet’ is a nebulous and unachievable goal, especially when the goalposts are constantly shifting. The ‘climate crisis’ is a means to an end, to progressively diminish the liberties and living standards of 99% of the population and transition to a neo-feudal, digitally controlled, near constant state of misery, poverty and truncated lifespans.

The unholy alliance of soulless billionaires, pseudo-scientists, Fabian socialists and power-hungry politicians and bureaucrats openly discuss their draconian plans: limiting people to purchasing just three items of clothing per year, ending car ownership, one short haul flight every three years and, for obedient little serfs, a few morsels of meat. Quite the great leap forward from banning incandescent light bulbs.

What can we do to stop the nightmare of fifteen-minute cities, CBDC and digital identities? Stop voting for parties who support the globalist agenda. The Greens, Labor and Liberals are all on board the net zero train and many politicians and officials are puppets of the WEF.

Support, join, volunteer, donate and run for parties such as One Nation, UAP and the Libertarian Party. Put the major parties last and freedom-friendly parties first.

The paperclip of freedom

Binding together with war-time symbol of defiance and unity

Norwegian teachers imprisoned in the Falstad concentration camp, near Trondheim, for their refusal to participate in the Nazi Teachers Association in the spring of 1942

By HARRY HOPKINS

A FRIEND turned up at a recent Stand in the Park meeting [see page 4 of this paper] with a three-inch paperclip attached to his shirt pocket. Being the curious type and not usually missing a trick, I asked him why he was wearing it.

He told me that during World War II, Norwegians who were passively resisting the German occupation took to wearing a paperclip as a token of their resistance. I had heard of the White Rose movement in Nazi Germany, which produced underground pamphlets and literature at great risk to those involved, with some members sacrificing their lives in the process. White Rose is active again today (and in the UK too), but the paperclip movement was a new one to me.

My friend had brought with him a supply of clips that he generously gave out to the assembled 'standers'. In return, I gave him a Stand In The Park badge that says: 'We stand for freedom'.

Norway was seen by Hitler as an important strategic country because of its coastline. He knew that to break the Allied blockade of Germany, he needed a relatively safe route for transport of supplies to maintain his war effort. Norway had declared its neutrality, but this was not going to stop him from getting what he wanted, so in April 1940, Germany invaded and occupied the country.

It didn't take long for the Germans to become established, and they set about trying to Nazify the country. The King and Crown Prince of Norway had decamped to England, and the Crown Princess had sought sanctuary in America, where she became a guest of F. D. Roosevelt in the White House.

The Norwegian population lived under German rule. Teachers were told to join the Nazi party and teach Nazism in classrooms, and the church was told to obey Hitler and the state. Anti-Jewish legislation was passed. In a population of four million, some 400,000 German troops were operating in Norway by 1945. With such a high ratio of occupation forces, any acts of rebellion, resistance and defiance were perilous. However, it kept many soldiers away from more active areas of conflict, thereby reducing the German ability to counter the Allied invasions from both East and West.

In 1940, students at Oslo University started wearing paperclips on their lapels as a visual, non-violent symbol of unity, resistance and national pride. Other symbols relating to Norwegian nationality had been banned and these young people wanted a way of displaying their rejection of Nazi ideology.

Why did they choose the paperclip? While there is no definite answer, it is thought that the 'binding together' function of the clip symbolised exactly what they wanted to display: We may be under German rule but we are united in our condemnation of it. Also it was thought, mistakenly as it turned out, that the paperclip had been invented by a Norwegian by the name of Johan Vaaler.

In time, the Germans cottoned on to the symbolism of the clip and it became a crime to wear one, but by then the Norwegians had found more practical ways to annoy their occupiers. Teachers went on strike and although some were sent to prison camps, it didn't deter the vast majority, and eventually the Germans had to give up on force-feeding their ideology through the education system.

Every bishop in Norway resigned, along with 90 per cent of the clergy, and here too the Nazis had to admit defeat with regard to their edict that the church must submit to 'obedience to the leader and the state'. German was a widely spoken language pre-war, but after the occupation, the majority of the population refused to speak it.

On public transport, Germans were shunned, so it was made a crime to stand if there was a vacant seat next to a German. It must have been difficult for soldiers in a foreign country trying to find directions from a population refusing to speak their language and giving them wrong directions whenever they could.

All of us who frequent our Stand in the Park meetings are under no illusions that in 2023 we are under an occupying force that, while not stomping around in jackboots and carrying guns, are nonetheless attempting to stamp their unholy, inhuman Agenda 2030 policies on the world. Behind the summer sunshine and the distracting rubbish that passes for mainstream news, there is no doubt that we are in the fight of our lives, if life as we know it is to survive.

I've been wearing my paperclip whenever I'm out and about and have not yet seen any more being worn. I've been asked about it a couple of times, and I take great pleasure in telling the story of its Norwegian origins.

And how does it relate to the present day I'm asked? It doesn't take much to get inquisitive souls nodding in agreement when they realise and acknowledge the huge transfer of wealth that has been taking place these last three years, because they are suffering along with everyone else.

Not to mention the fact that more people are becoming aware that governments are not acting in our best interests. Five jabs plus boosters has opened a lot of eyes, although in some cases it is too late.

I shall continue to wear my paperclip as my new-found symbol of resistance. If it was good enough for the brave souls of occupied Norway, it is good enough for me.

Florida Surgeon General calls to end COVID vaccines

By DR JOSEPH MERCOLA

Citing contaminated vaccines and lack of oversight on the part of the FDA and CDC to maintain proper quality control measures, Florida Surgeon General Dr. Joseph Ladapo is calling for an immediate end to the covid vaccines.

"The U.S. Food and Drug Administration and Centers for Disease Control and Prevention have always played it fast and loose with covid-19 vaccine safety," he said on X, formerly Twitter, "but their failure to test for DNA integration with the human genome – as their own guidelines dictate – when the vaccines are known to be contaminated with foreign DNA is intolerable."

In the full text of his remarks also posted on X, he added: "Providers concerned about patient health risks associated with covid-19 should prioritize patient access to non-mRNA covid-19 vaccines and treatment. It is my hope that, in regard to covid-19, the FDA will one day seriously consider its regulatory responsibility to protect human health, including the integrity of the human genome."

"I am calling for a halt to the use of mRNA covid-19 vaccines."

Parallels of manipulation

By WOLF KAMOME

Creating fear of threats that do not exist

THE tidal wave of tyranny in the name of science has unmasked evil as a palpable force and actual presence.

It is a time when academic and bestselling author, Dr Naomi Wolf, writes in The Bodies of Others about the ‘massive edifice of evil’ we witnessed during 2020-22; ‘the presence of such rampant, elemental evil’ in which ‘I felt a darkness beyond anything human.’

What came to the fore during the fully orchestrated ‘pandemic’ could be said to have started 130 years earlier.

According to Hidden History, a book on the subject of the secret origins of the First World War: ‘A secret society of rich and powerful men was established in London in 1891 with the long-term aim of taking control of the entire world.’

The book reveals the ‘deliberately concocted lie’ regarding the origins of WWI; that it was neither the Germans nor the Russians, nor the British or any other rightfully elected government that pushed for war.

Instead, it was a secret cabal of international bankers, industrialists and other powerful, unelected men, as well as their political agents, who were ‘responsible for one of the most heinous crimes perpetrated on humanity’.

Reading Hidden History, I was struck by the similarity of rhetoric and vocabulary employed in the run-up to the Great War, and what was used on people during the covid-19 pandemic:

‘Democracy was contemptuously abused by hidden forces that had the political and

Democracy was contemptuously abused by hidden forces that had the political and financial power to manipulate public opinion financial power to manipulate public opinion. Propaganda misrepresented motive, moulding fear into hysteria and empowering the madness that swept reason aside.’

Sound familiar?

Cecil Rhodes, initiator of the ‘Jesuit-like secret society’ (a church for the extension of the British Empire), looks upon men as ‘machines’ and is ‘quite unscrupulous as to the means he employs’.

Apart from enormous wealth, those in the secret society’s inner circle were highly influential people. The self-made man and gifted academic, Alfred Lord Milner, took over the position of leading the ‘men behind the curtain’ after Cecil Rhodes’ death.

The following sounds eerily synchronistic to what is happening today too: the death of Queen Victoria in 1901 ‘came as no surprise, since her health had been deteriorating for some time. Nevertheless, it was a shock to the nation because Victoria had been queen for 63 years and the vast majority had known no other monarch.’

The ascent of Edward VII heralded a significant change and was crucially important for the secret cabal. The Prince of Wales ascending the British throne;

King Edward VII, freemason and supporter of the secret cabal; King Charles III, supporter of the World Economic Forum and its globalist agendas (the ‘Great Reset’).

The secret cabal turned the British people’s desire for peace on its head through an age-old weapon – fear. By manufacturing this ‘crisis’, they succeeded in generating a climate of fear about a threat that didn’t exist.

Since by 1913, all attempts to goad Germany into war had failed, they now shifted tactics and focused on Germany’s ally, Austria, by way of the Balkans. The fateful assassination of the heir to the Habsburg monarchy triggered a military threat against Serbia, which led to the final and fatal blow: Russia’s mobilisation.

The secret cabal had finally achieved its desperate goal, plunging Europe and the rest of the world into the abyss.

The ‘duty of obedience to government’ is one of the cabal’s ‘moral ideas’ and plainly reflects their ideal of top-down hierarchy as they ‘feared that all culture and civilisation would go down to destruction, because of our inability to construct some kind of political unity larger than the nation-state.’

After the Second World War, the globalist baton in their race for a ‘One World Government’ was passed on from the ageing British Empire to the more youthful United States – the superpower which has been the driving force behind globalisation, up until now.

The global elites will continue their dirty business of digital ID, digital currencies, pandemic hoaxes, total surveillance, and so forth, ending in a fully digitalised, transhumanist nightmare of total control and no freedom, where the delirious fantasies of Klaus Schwab, of chip implants in brains, and surveillance from ‘under the skin’ become reality.

But there is one thing they don’t reckon with in this spiritual battle for the soul of man – spirituality is something they don’t have, as the trial lawyer Dr Reiner Fuellmich has pointed out.

And Dr Wolf writes: ‘I do think we need to call, as Milton did, as Shakespeare did, as Emily Dickinson did, on help from elsewhere.’

When dark powers rage most terribly, the brightest light also shines.

The new imperialism

By JERRY ROBERTS

DR Meryl Nass is an authority on germ warfare who has endured a long-running dispute with the Medical Licensing Board of Maine in north-eastern USA over her care of patients during the covid epidemic.

In an interview with Kevin Barrett on Truth Jihad Radio on 17 September 2023 she described the pitfalls of the proposed World Health Organisation’s pandemic treaty and the United Nations’ Pandemic, Prevention, Preparedness and Response (PPPR).

The conversation then turned to the big picture of political power and ideology.

“The richest people in the world are not nationalists,” said Dr Nass.

“They are globalists. For instance, David Rockefeller believed in one world government. That was the only way to ensure peace and to have a situation where corporations could do business without interference.

“When corporations and governments blend together that is the definition of fascism, although there are several definitions.

“What we have is that rich people have figured out ways to get their own candidates to run governments both at the administrative level and at the top politician level by using the World Economic Forum and the young global leaders and other mechanisms, other ‘secret’ societies like Skull and Bones.

“The organisations exist that work in conjunction with very large corporations, very rich people and government to bring forth commonly determined policies.

“Globalism, imperialism and wealth are becoming all one thing.”

Kevin Barrett brought ideology into the conversation. “Most of the world’s politically active super-rich people – to the extent that they are loyal to any particular project – it would be to impose American style neoliberalism on the entire world. So rich oligarchs can rule everywhere without interference by pesky nationalist governments.”

Dr Nass replied, “Neoliberalism is neither neo nor new and it is not liberal. All these terms don’t mean anything anymore.

“What we are living under is raw power and imperialism with a progressively smaller number of people on top calling the shots and trying to take over the resources, the money and everything else in the world.

“It is a raw power grab and is as old as the hills.”
